statement of that affair, which they allege was incorrect and injurious to them. The issue, it seems, was raised on the selection of "subs," or substitutes, for the regular printers when they take time for rest or necessity. The selection of these, within certain limitations of the foreman, is recognized as the conjectured has taken the form of substantia right of the printers, who, in the first place, have the same interest in this that a carpenter or watch-maker would have in selecting workmen who were to be entrusted with their tools; and, in the second place, the regular printers are expected to provide a substitute in their absence; but the "subs" are subject to the approval of the foreman.

The authorities in the Commercial office placed on the "sub-list" certain printers whom the trade had branded as "rata" for working under the regular prices, and insisted that they should be preferred as "subs" by their printers. The epithet "rat" is about the most offensive one that printers personal interest may predicated; and with can apply. It designates a class of workmen whom they regard as traitors to their fellows, destroying the means of their own protection | promise to be remunerative? and degrading the laborer to helpless submission to the terms of the employer. Against this imposition the printers struck, and this question the Commercial described as Whether we or they should be the highest authority in the arrangement of our affairs." The printers, not having an organ at command by which their side of the question could be stated, have issued this circular.

The merits of the question will be readily seen by printers, and probably by all. Those gentlemen, also, of dignity and position, once typos, but now Presidents and Treasurers of railroads-who, according to the Commercial. performed that impressive ceremony of marching solemnly into the Commercial composing-room, laying off their coats, rolling up their shirt-sleeves, and asking the foreman for a "take" will see the merits of the cause which elicited so much praiseworthy patriotism.

There are two prominent features in the case: the first, the interference with the customary right of the regular printers to select their "subs" from the whole list. The other is that so offensive an interference could only have been intended as an attack upon the Typographical Union itself; and this involves the question of the right of laborers to make those combinations for the protection of wages, which in various forms are common for the purpose of increasing the profits of capital. In regard to that, the right of persons to combine to regulate their wages is much better founded than that of corporations to combine to increase their profits; but we recognize no right in anybody to drive men from their labor into a combination.

Death of Mrs. Jameson. vers of literature, will be pained to hear of the death of the well-known English authoress and excellent-hearted woman, Mrs. Jameson, which melancholy fact is simply announced by the last steamer from Europe. The writings of Mrs. Jameson, in various departments of literature, have been familiar for years to most cultivated readers in this country, and though they are sufficiently terse and genial, rigorous and eloquent, to appeal to the intellect, they contain an amount with the good and true that must commend them strongly to the heart. The mere vanity, the ambition even, that prompts most women-and men, too-to write, had less a share in this distinguished woman's authorship, than her sincere desire and earnest purpose to benefit as best she might, the circle of her readers, by the expression of what she held as truth.

of genuine sentiment and of large sympathy

While she possessed a warm fancy and delicate sensibility, a keen perception and an accurate knowledge of human nature, with a marked tendency to the ideal, and a passionate love of the beautiful, as are instanced in her admirable, and, perhaps, best known work, "The Loves of the Poets," she had far more than an average share of genuine good sense, and practical wisdom, enabling her to see things as they are and as they ought to be, and inducing her to tear away from society the tinseled shams that surround its customs and its votaries.

Mrs. Jameson could separate-which few women can—the good from the bad, and give credit for one without failing to perceive the other. She was liberal to all her sex, and doubtless did much to elevate her sisternood into the right-believing and right-feeling that belonged to herself.

Her earnest efforts have met with the sole reward she sought—and this is the highest meed of well directed effort—the advantage and elevation of her kind. And if we regret that one possessed of so many gifts and such generous aspirations has passed away, we can not but think she filled a high sphere, and firmly walked where women of superior genius have feared to stand.

Wz are inclined to believe, from the appearance of an elaborate biographical sketch, three-fourths of a column in length, of Gen. G. W. L. Newspaper Venality---Job Offices, with Newspaper Attachments.

Venality in the newspaper press is a thing which the public never fails to discover With mankind in general an honest journal is appreciated like an honest man. The world, from considerations other than those of interest, desires to know who are the truly leaving a large demand unsupplied. We incorruptible, and knowing, never fails to shall publish to-morrow an edition large honor them. Newspaper publishers make a mistake when they suppose that they can use The Sunday Press will be delivered to all our | their columns for illegitimate purposes without being detected. The sense of disgust which several of ou cotemporaries have exhibited, each toward when the people have more leisure for read- the other, in consideration of alleged pracing newspapers, and when there are but few tices of corruption, is evidence of the ideas which they severally entertain of the manner in which such practices are looked upon by The Cinciunati Typographical Union and the Commercial.

The Typographical Union have published a in no other way damage the other so effectcircular, stating the cause of the late strike of unlly as by showing up his avarice, and the the printers in the office of the Cincinnati hypocrisy of his pretensions to independence Commercial, and correcting that journal's and impartiality. To do so, we may be permitted to say, each has, within a few days past, inbored assiduously; and, it is probable not without some effect. Not that the public was greatly in the dark upon the subject before. Suspicions, perhaps, have hardened into convictions, and that which was vaguely

> To men of narrow minds the control of the columns of a public journal offers occasions of temptation of a kind that it is hard to resist. The devotion of the greater share of the newspapers of the country to the interests of some party, to sustain, right or wrong, its measures and its men, inaugurates interest as the rule in respect to the largest subject of newspaper treatment, and renders its entrance easy, into any of the others. He who prostitutes his paper in politics has no ground of consistency to stand upon when asked to do so in relation to anything of which s such, when a temptation is offered, there can be but one question: Does the operation

The leading characteristic of a venal news paper is timidity in respect to matters of sentiment. The conductors, conscious of that want of integrity which alone can give weight to opinions, become parasites. They attach themselves to systems and ideas which bear the appearance of established respectability, and while they eschew all novelties as dangerous, seek to prove the sincerity of their faith by their intolerance of dissent and dissenters, and their professed dread of the in fluence of their notions upon society. Of this slavishness—this utter and pitiful selfabnegation-Cincinnati can furnish abundant examples. In ostentatious poverty of spiritin that servility which invites aggression, and dreads to do right for fear of offending, some of our cotemporaries may, without danger of exaggeration, be said to excel.

The reading public has needed neither the testimony of the Gazette against the Comercial, nor that of the Commercial against the Gazette, to be aware that the editorial departments in certain of our public journals-the railway, the river, and the amuse ment especially, but more or less, all the others-are conducted with the express view to enlarge the business and profits of the job printing establishment connected with the concern. Taken together, the thing is, in fact, a job office with a newspaper attachment-the latter in practice, holding to the former a subordinate relation. It needs but a cursory glance over the departments above mentioned, in any of our long-established and highly respectable public journals, to discover how the land lies-which theater, o steamboat, or railway patronizes the job office to which it is attached, and which carries its posters, its bills or its tickets to some other concern. Does a show, a mountebank The friends of humanity, no less than the or a humbug, come down pretty handsomely, it is puffed in proportion; does a corporation determine to give all its work to one establishment, the impulse communi cates itself instantly to the proper department, and is manifested in glowing periods and fulsome personalities. The heads of these departments are, in fact, runners for the job offices. They offer their columns to be prostituted in proportion as that is patronized. They hunt down itinerent freight and ticket agents, besiege the

THE Gazette refers to the election of New York delegates to Chicago by State Convention as having been devised by Mr. Seward's friends to force a united delegation.

There was a tolerably good precedent for it in the election of delegates in 1856, and it | whi will hardly do to call that an attempt to force unanimity. The fact is that the first Republican delegates from New York were elected by State Convention at the request of the minority, in order to prevent a united delegation, and to give the Barnburner part of the Republicans a fair proportion, they being in a minority in all the districts, and such a compromise being impracticable in single districts. The same considerations have force still. At any rate Republican precedents preponderate in favor of State Conventions.

The work comprises fourteen hundred pages, making two large volumes, with descriptions of nearly five thousand species of animals, and is illustrated by fourteen hundred engravings, the greater part of them actual portraits of animals, and includes notices of the monsters of the ancient geological periods, also illustrated. The popular as well as the scientific names of animals are given, and it is probably the most complete popular history of the animal kingdom in the world. Mr. Goodrich has enlivened his subject by a pleasing style, and by stores of curious information and anecdote. few works are published which afford so much entertainment and instruction to families as this, while it is a complete work tor the scientific naturalist.

Mr. Baker and his associate are now in this city offering opportunities to subscribe for the work, and delivering to subscribers the first four numbers.

The Rag-picker of Paris is quite a good drama of its kind, sensational, and to use a not very elegant term, Frenchy, and we are informed has been put upon the stage in good style. The dramatic spectacle of The Lest Days of Pompeii is also worthy a visit from every lover of the beautiful novels of Bulwer, and every admirer of the drama.

audience at this popular place of amusement last night, and the performance passed off creditably. Benefits have been given the actors night after night during the week, and now at the close the manager announces a programme "for the benefit of everybody."

The entertainment will begin with The Gunmaker of Moscow, dramatized from one of those stories so largely advertised by a certain Ann-street publishing house, to be followed by a dance by Kato Pennoyer, and Edward Fitzball's drama of The Greek Slave, and will close with the new local drama of Good and Evil. With such a bill every body will doubtless be benc-

night at the Opera-house was much larger than that of the previous evening, and the interest awakened by The Predigal Son, is, of course, correspondingly ing is likely to add to the intellectual and moral value of the journal upon which it is practiced, others are as well qualified to judge as ourselves. We are simply speaking of what is, in the light of testimony, not at all recondite.

So The Prodigal Som, is, of course, correspondingly on the increase.

Mr. Conway's "Reuben" is well conceived and executed in a manner highly creditable to him as an artist. The impersonation of the gentleand forgiving Hebrew maiden, "Jepthele," in the hands of Viola Crocker, is all that could be desired. Quiet, easy, graceful and natural, she wins all hearts by her beautiful simplicity, and contract the contract of the product of the produ beautiful simplicity, and retains the sympathy of all who witness her rendering of the character. No wonder the prodigal should return; for with the memory of such a love it would be impossible to be wholly lost.

The part of "Nefte," by Addie Proctor is also admirably performed. Although there is nothing in the character to render it interesting, the manner in which she represents her contempt for "the divine Lia," and assumes a love for "Azael," while at the same time she deceives him, are such in their way thoroughly finished and artistic. As a whole, The Prodical Sam is a decided success, and we heartly advise all who desire to witness a fine spectacle, admirably put them the stage and performed, to visit this elegant establishment before the play is finally withdrawn.

When discovered the flames had made such progress that it was impossible to either arrest them or save any of the contents of the building. Four valuable horses, several setts of harness and a considerable amount of feed were entirely consumed. The loss is estimated at about $1,000, upon which there was no insurance. There is no doubt that the fire was the work of an incendiary.
